Application Deadline

February 6, 2025

PROGRAM

By participating in this program, students will have the opportunity to learn concepts and skills in the disciplines of public health, medicine, extension education, and community development in order to understand how to evaluate and develop solutions in both Colombia and the United States. Students will be integrated into community-based events, such as health fairs, that will allow them to apply the concepts learned in the course (e.g., assessing patient needs, intercultural communications to increase health literacy, understanding the role of culture in diagnoses and treatment, etc.) to Latinos in need. The program is offered in collaboration with the National Faculty of Public Health at the University of Antioquia.

LOCATION

Medellín is Colombia's second largest city and is nestled in the Aburrá Valley of the Andes Mountains. From the mountains, you can see how the Medellín River runs parallel to the Metro, which connects various parts of the city. There is an abundance of parks, libraries, museums and public spaces where many events take place. In the surrounding villages of Medellín, life is simple with relaxing landscapes and nature reserves.

EXCURSIONS

Group excursions will include a city tour; a visit to Guatapé and Parque Arví; and academic visits to Granizal, San Cristobal, and Medellín.

HOUSING

Students will stay in shared apartments during the course of the program.

COURSE INFORMATION

The course is taught by UF faculty. All students will earn credit for the following:

AEC 4932 / 6932: Global Health & Social Disparities in Colombia

Total Number of Credits Offered: 3 UF GPA
