On this 1-week intensive program, students will be spending their time exploring Quito and learning from experts in the field about cacao and the impact it has on local culture. Students will be able to visit various local cacao plantations to see how the cacao tree grows, when the fruits and seeds are harvested and how these are converted into all different types of chocolate. Throughout the program, students will have the opportunity to sample cacao, understand how nutritional value of cacao can vary, and practice the art of cooking with this special ingredient.

This program partners with the Universidad San Francisco de Quito (USFQ), which is a private liberal arts college located in Quito, Ecuador. As the most populous city of Ecuador, Quito is full of life and history! While students on this program will be traveling during the summer, please note that average temperatures for May are around 67 degrees. Most of the time, you will be located in or around Quito, but there are excursions to some of the local cloud forest just outside of the capital.

Activities will include a visit to Pacari Plantation; Otavalo artisinal market, a cloud forest and butterfly farm; and a chocolate cooking workshop.

Students will be staying in a hotel with shared occupancy.

All students on this program will earn credit for the following course:
